Speech. (Abdu'l-Baha, Promotion of Universal Peace, pp. 59-61)

International cooperation whose desire is the promotion of the universal medium of intellectual culture may be selected from the various countries of the world to engage in this work. It is my hope that it may be performed through the medium of a language that is universal, and its success will prove to be the means of progress and development of all races. We must realize that the means of the progress and development of all races will be used among the nations.

International means of communication, in my opinion, will become the cause of the tranquility of the nation and the prosperity of the nation. Therefore, the very first service to the world of man is to establish this auxiliary language. The need for it has arisen today because of the spread of the shared needs of the human world depends upon language. The expression of these needs can only be acquired by means of language. The foundation of these needs is language and the unity of language is the unity of the world. Therefore, the question of an auxiliary international language is of utmost importance. Through the use of an auxiliary international language and observe the germ of the great idea. The need for language is the need for the expression of the thoughts of the human world. Therefore, the Most Great Peace and the Promulgation of Universal Peace cannot be accomplished except through the medium of language.
